But for the want of nerve or backbone, serious trouble might have occurred in this part of the moral vineyard recently; the chief circumstances are about as follows: One big man had in his mind the thought, and perhaps the determination to give another big man a good drubbing. Some how or some way the two purchased to meet, where No. 1 ordered No. 2 to dismount, which order was promptly obeyed, after which a good deal of pawing, scraping and foaming at the mouth was indulged in, then No. 1 withdrew. He had not retreated, whatever you may call it, before his blood was shed.

From one Republican orator, nowadays we hear the statement, "The Democratic party is being broken up." The line of the solid South is "busted" and the Republicans are going to be successful this year. While from another comes the sad wail: "The old rebel moseback Democrats continue to stick to their party." They have not agreed among themselves, and no doubt the 6th of November will have to settle the question for them. We have but little doubt it will be settled then to the satisfaction of the sticking Democrats."

SOME of the Republican papers are prophesying that Flory is going to eat Finks for railroad commissioner. It is an easy matter to prophesy, but fulfilling the prophecy is a more difficult and uncertain task. It is not the first time these same parties have prophesied evil in Missouri. This was the cry two years ago, when they said that "Stand-up-for-Missouri" Bill Warner was going to eat Bill Stone for governor. Stone was elected by an increased vote of the Democratic party, and Finks will be, too.
